fans more options to follow your content. 2. Wider audience Let's face it: some people don't like podcasts. Moreover, there are many others who just can't listen to it. For example, people with hearing disabilities or those who don't understand the language that well. Have you ever asked yourself "how to grow podcast audience"? Well, this might be a solution! Thanks to transcribing your podcast, you will have the opportunity to spread your knowledge around a broader audience, who'd otherwise be excluded. 3. More presence on Social Media Besides promoting the podcast itself, through transcribing podcasts, you can easily take quotes out of it and share them through social networks, like Facebook and Twitter. 4. Effective SEO Textual information is much more discoverable by search engines - audio files cannot be found by Google and others unless you write down what the audio is about. Transcribing podcasts increases the chance of your content being found on the web. 5. It's effortless through a podcast transcription service! Don't want to bother wasting hours on manual transcription? Are you looking for podcast transcription software? At Amberscript, you can have a solid transcript of your podcast done in 5 minutes, brought to you by our latest speech recognition technology. Transcribing podcasts has never been so easy! For many students transcription at university is becoming as normal as drinking coffee in the morning. Particularly in study programs that involve a lot of qualitative research, transcription is necessary. During exams, this can become very stressful as it takes a lot of time. An Interview with Katja Katja is 22 years old and is studying International Communication & Media in Germany. She knows quite a bit about interview transcription at university. We asked her why there is so much transcription work to be done in her studies, and how she found a way around it. Katja, tell us who you are and what you do Katja: Sure. As you already mentioned, I am 22 years old and I am studying marketing and communication. What do you especially like about that field of study? And what are typical tasks there like? Katja: Instead of exams, we often work individually or in groups on projects and papers that require a lot of qualitative and quantitative research. And exactly because of that I chose this study program, as I really like doing research. I also enjoy conducting interviews because, in my opinion, you get the most honest answers during a personal conversation. But to just attach audio files of these interviews to your project is not enough for the lecturers, right? Katja: Unfortunately not. And for the analysis of an interview, writing it down is necessary anyway. I had never heard of the word "transcription" before going to university and was quite shocked when I realized how much work it actually takes to write down an interview. A ten minute interview can easily take one hour to transcribe, so you lose a lot of valuable time. Especially since I have a part-time job on the weekends, transcription at university is just really annoying. Why do you think that the transcription of interviews is so important in your study program? Katja: I think there are several reasons. Especially with topics that deal with consumer behavior, personal opinions of the target group are very important. It's worth it to have a closer look and not just have questionnaires be filled in. Marketing is about understanding what your target group wants and needs, so interviews just make a lot of sense. However, transcription is necessary for students from all kinds of study programs nowadays. Luckily I found a great solution. How did you get to know Amberscript? Katja: It was actually just by chance through a fellow student. I knew that he had four interviews to transcribe for the next day and by knowing that alone, I was like man, how in the world is he going to do that? And still, I met him at the bar that evening. When I asked him how he manages to transcribe everything until tomorrow, he told me he was using Amberscript's transcription software. With that, transcripts are automatically created in a few minutes and you only have to correct them afterward. I got very curious and took a closer look at Amberscript. And what was your first impression of Amberscript and what is your experience so far? Katja: I was a bit skeptical at first, how well that really works. However, if you realize that the step of typing everything out is done by the software and that you only have to correct those transcripts afterward, you understand in what way it saves so much time. However, with the perfect service of Amberscript, where these additional corrections are taken over by transcribers, I was not sure if that might be considered to be ghostwriting. That's of course forbidden at most universities. After taking a look at my first automatically generated transcript and after being assured by my lecturer that perfect transcription is not seen as ghostwriting, my skepticism was blown away. So in the end, you have the option to just use the software and adjust everything yourself or to outsource the entire transcription process which is of course more expensive. Either way, you save a lot of time. It's crazy that, on average, one hour of audio takes around six hours to transcribe. Thanks to Amberscript's software I get the same result after one to two hours. Of course you have to pay for the service, but if you think about it, you actually even save money. Instead of transcribing for hours you can work and earn more money than the transcription costs in the first place. Or you just start analysing your interviews. At the moment, exams are coming up again and after that I have to look for an internship in the summer. The right organisation, while you are studying, is incredibly important, and thanks to Amberscript, I have one less thing to worry about. Of course, everyone is different in that regard, but for me personally, it is very hard to focus on one thing while having all the other things I also have to do in the back of my mind. Planning is key! In the end, using transcription software like Amberscript will be helpful to any student, so I'm sure more and more will use this service in the future. I'm already a convinced user! Great! Good luck and thank you for the interview. Are you working on research interviews? Do you find it difficult, because you do not know where to start, or maybe you have already started but it looks like you are not going to meet your deadlines? How much time a research takes, varies a lot. Some researches can take years upon years while some researches only take a week. One thing is almost always the same though: the production of the interview transcript takes up a majority of the time. It does not matter how long your research takes, it is always a good choice to save time. This allows you to focus on things that are truly important, like analyzing the data and drawing conclusions. The Research Your research is the core of every dissertation, thesis or market research. When conducting research it is important not to deviate from your research question too much. You will probably use desk and field research. Field research can take the form of qualitative research or quantitative research. Most researches require qualitative research. You have multiple types of qualitative research. Research though qualitative research usually takes the form of interviews. You will need an interview transcript for your report, and it will also help you to better analyze data. We are going to talk about: Conducting the research interviewsCreating your interview's transcript How to conduct a research interview? The purpose of an interview is to get the right and enough information from the interviewee. It is important that the information contributes to your research, and that you get enough information. To gain the right information from an interview you will have to prepare good questions. You will also have to question the interviewee in the right way. 5 tips that will allow you to get the most out of your interview. 1) Prepare a questionnaire or a list of the topics you wish to discuss. This creates a kind of shopping list, so you are ensured you will not forget anything during the interview. A questionnaire or topic list also ensures you don't lose the thread and do not deviate from the main topic too much. 2) Do not influence the interviewee in his answers. By not influencing the interviewee you get more honest and reliable answers. For example do not ask the question: 'What do you like about Los Angeles?' (perhaps the interviewee does not like Los Angeles at all), but ask: 'What is your opinion about Los Angeles?' 3) Act in a professional manner during the entire interview. Show appreciation and understanding for the interviewee, but do not exaggerate. Behave in a way that shows the interviewee you are genuinely interested in what he/she has to say. If you stick to these points the interviewee will be more open and honest. This will allow you to gain more information from the interview. 4) Before asking personal or controversial questions, warm them up with easier questions first. Remember this person has probably never met you, if you start asking personal questions right away the interviewee will probably go in defensive mode. It is important that you warm the interviewee up first with easy questions, this will build trust. Later on in the interview, you can start asking harder questions. 5) The most important tip of all: practice. The best way to get better at interviewing is to practice. That is why you should practice your interview first. You can practice your interview on a classmate or on an acquaintance first. Ask this person to give you feedback on how the interview went. Pay extra notice to your posture, your questions, your introduction, the structure, how you ask supplementary questions and whether you are polite. You can also record this practice interview and listen to it later. This way you can find ways you improve yourself. How to structure an interview Now that you know what to do and what not to do during your interview it is time to go and conduct your interviews. A research interview usually consists of three parts it is important that you walk through these points chronologically. Opening: In the opening of your interview you first explain your goal. You explain what you are hoping to find out. You will also tell how long the interview will probably take and the topic that will be discussed. Then you start the real interview with an open-ended question.Middle section: In the middle section of the interview the interviewee has the chance to share their story. It is important that you listen carefully during this phase. In this phase of the conversation you have to ask good questions and make sure the interviewee doesn't deviate too much from the main topic.Final: When you have gotten enough information from the interview, you propose to end the interview. Walkthrough the most important points together and give the interviewee the possibility to add extra information. If something is unclear, this is your time to ask questions. When conducting the real interview it is important that you make recordings as well. Do not think you can remember everything said. In the opening of the interview ask if the interviewee has any problems with being recorded, they usually do not, but if they do make notes. By making audio recordings you can fully focus on the interview itself instead of making notes. Afterward, you can listen back to your recordings and analyze everything. Preparing well for your research interview takes a lot of time, but it costs even more time to convert your audio to text. To analyze your interviews and to include your interviews in your report, you need to transcribe your interviews. This is an extremely time-consuming and mentally demanding process. Fortunately we have thought of a solution which can save you a lot of time and pain. You can read about this below. What is the best way of transcribing my research interviews?
